Focus

- Litigation
- Construction

Providing strategic advocacy for contractors, design professionals, and global companies. Practical guidance in matters spanning the full lifecycle of construction disputes.

Jessica focuses her practice on construction litigation and dispute resolution for contractors, architects, engineers, design professionals, and joint ventures involved in both public and private projects. She handles matters ranging from claims involving construction defects, design errors and omissions, and delay and acceleration damages, to bonds and liens, professional negligence, licensure issues, building code violations, and catastrophic loss matters such as personal injury and wrongful death.

Jessica's work routinely involves handling high-stakes, technically complex disputes for national and international companies, including material suppliers and engineering firms operating on a global scale. She is frequently engaged in matters involving significant claimed damages and has achieved favorable resolutions in cases involving public entities, high levels of media attention, and sovereign immunity defenses, as well as claims barred by contractual choice-of-law provisions and statutes of limitation. She also assists clients with large-scale infrastructure disputes, including the preparation of certified claims submitted to public agencies.
