I. DEFAULTS UNDER PURCHASE AND SALE CONTRACTS

A. Nature of Defaults.

A default under a contract for the sale and purchase of real estate in Florida must be material to be legally justified. If a material default occurs, the contract for sale, if enforceable under Florida law, generally governs the parties' rights and remedies. Although there can be numerous grounds to declare a default, they generally fall within two categories: monetary and non-monetary defaults.

1. Monetary Defaults.

A monetary default is where a party, usually the buyer, fails to meet a financial obligation due the other party, usually the seller, under the contract for sale. Typically, this occurs when a buyer fails or refuses to pay a deposit or pay the final purchase price for the property. A seller can also cause a monetary default, although it is less common and depends on the terms of the contract for sale. For example, a contract for sale could provide for the seller to pay for agreed upon repairs or improvements to the property and to provide evidence of such payment before closing. The seller’s failure to do so would arguably constitute a monetary default under the contract for sale. A monetary default is almost always considered material, although the timing of the default may or may not be material depending on whether the contract for sale provides that time is of the essence.\footnote{Sun Bank of Miami v. Lester, 404 So. 2d 141, 142 (Fla. 3d DCA 1981).}

2. Non-Monetary Defaults.

Non-monetary defaults under contracts for sale can be more problematic. For example, a seller could fail to disclose known, material, latent defects to the property prior to closing, such as termite infestation or roof leaks. A title search could also reveal a title defect which the seller is unwilling to cure, despite the terms of the contract requiring such a cure. The contract for sale could require the seller to actually perform repairs or improvements to the property, but the seller fails to do so prior to closing. The seller could fail to sufficiently maintain a minimum level of tenants before closing. The ways in which either party could cause a non-monetary default are only limited by the obligations set forth in the contract for sale and to the extent that the default is material. In general, a non-monetary default will be judicially enforced provided there is evidence that the non-defaulting party has been materially prejudiced.

B. Notice of Default and Right to Cure.
Most contracts for sale require one party to give the other party notice of a material default and a reasonable opportunity to cure the default. Such notice is a condition precedent to the non-defaulting party enforcing his or her rights under the contract for sale.

C. Waiver of Notice and Default.

By closing on any sale with knowledge of a default under the contract, the non-defaulting party may be deemed to have waived any default notice or any right to enforce the default, unless such rights are expressly reserved in a writing signed by all parties. However, many contracts for sale include “anti-waiver” provisions to prevent the assertion of a continuing waiver. The following is one example of such a provision:

Either party’s forebearance or waiver of any breach or violation of this contract shall not be construed as a continuing waiver or consent to any subsequent breach or violation and shall not bar any party’s right to demand strict compliance with that provision or any other provision of this agreement. No course of dealing between the seller and the buyer shall constitute a waiver of any of the seller’s rights or any of the buyer’s obligations as due hereunder.

Notwithstanding a similar provision, a party’s conduct of accepting a cure of a default could be deemed a waiver of the default and similar types of future defaults. For example, the seller may accept a deposit that is untimely made under the contract. Even though the contract for sale may provide that time is of the essence for all obligations, the seller may have thereby waived this requirement to refuse a future untimely deposit. For a court to make that determination, it would have to conclude that the default from the first untimely deposit was waived, along with the anti-waiver provision itself.

Florida’s parol evidence rule may provide some protection against a party to a contract alleging that its terms were modified or waived by an oral agreement. The rule is that, if the terms of a contract are unambiguous and the contract is a complete agreement, those terms are not subject to modification, variance or contradiction by parol (oral) evidence.\(^2\) If the contract for sale is ambiguous as to the parties’ intent on any matter, parol evidence will be admissible on the issue.\(^3\) The parol evidence rule serves as a shield to protect a valid, complete and unambiguous written instrument from any verbal assault that would contradict, add to, subtract from it, or affect its construction. Since the rule only applies if the parties’ agreement is unambiguous and complete, it is important that the contract is clear in its terms and expressly states that it is the entire agreement between the seller and the buyer and all other oral or written understandings and agreements are merged into the contract and are deemed void.

In addition, Florida law excuses performance of a contract, if performance is either impossible or the contract purpose has become commercially frustrated. For either of these defenses to apply, the performance must be more than difficult or burdensome. Further, these defenses will not apply if the impossibility or frustration of purpose was foreseeable at the time the contract was formed.

II. SELLER’S REMEDIES

Should the buyer breach a material term of a contract for sale, the seller has several alternative remedies. The seller may choose to retain the property and sue for breach of contract or the seller may elect to sue in equity for specific performance. In other words, the seller may sue for actual damages caused by a default, or request a court, under limited circumstances, to order specific performance and require the buyer to complete the sale. As a practical matter, however, courts generally do not grant specific performance against a buyer who refuses to complete any sale in the absence of evidence that the buyer has the financial ability to close.

If the seller chooses to retain the property and sue the buyer for damages, the proper measure of actual damages is the difference between the agreed purchase price in the contract and the fair value of the property at the time of the breach, less any money received by the seller under the contract for sale.\footnote{Buschman v. Clark, 583 So. 2d 799, 800 (Fla. 1st DCA 1991); Silvestri, 418 So. 2d at 1203.} Unless expressly precluded by the contract for sale, the seller may also recover such incidental and consequential damages that were reasonably contemplated by the parties at the time the contract was executed and which directly and proximately result from the buyer’s default.\footnote{Id.} A seller’s incidental and consequential damages may include additional title search expenses, closing fees or broker’s fees which would not have otherwise been paid, but for the buyer’s default.

B. Liquidated (Deposit) Damages.

Most contracts for sale provide that the seller may retain, as liquidated damages, all deposits made by the buyer in the event of a material breach. The amount of liquidated damages, however, must be reasonably related to: (i) the actual damages incurred by the seller; (ii) other facts and circumstances known to the parties as of the date the contract was signed; and (iii) with due regard to future expectations. The sum for liquidated damages cannot be disproportionate to any compensatory damages that may have been reasonably expected to result from a breach at the time the contract was executed.\footnote{Valenti v. Coral Reef Shopping Ctr., Inc., 316 So. 2d 589, 592 (Fla. 3d DCA 1975); Hooper v. Breneman, 417 So. 2d 315, 317 (Fla. 5th DCA 1982).} Further, the liquidated damages may not be a penalty, otherwise the contract provision will not be enforced.\footnote{Hutchison v. Tompkins, 259 So. 2d 129, 132 (Fla. 1972); Berndt v. Bieberstein, 465 So. 2d 1264, 1265 (Fla. 2d DCA 1985).} The enforcement of a liquidated damages clause may also be called into question if the seller has the express contractual option to recover actual compensatory damages in excess of the amount of liquidated damages.\footnote{Lefemine v. Baron, 573 So. 2d 326, 327 (Fla. 1991); Crosby Forrest Prods., Inc. v. Byers, 623 So. 2d 565, 568 (Fla. 5th DCA 1993); Ropiza v. Reyes, 583 So. 2d 400, 401 (Fla. 3d DCA 1991); Hackett v. J.R.L. Dev., Inc., 566 So. 2d 601, 603 (Fla. 2d DCA 1990); Haisfield v. Fleming, Haile & Shaw, P.A., 819 So. 2d 182, 186 (Fla. 4th DCA 2002).}

C. Specific Performance.

The obligations for performance under the contract for sale must be clear, definite and certain for a court to order specific performance in the event the buyer fails or refuses to close.\footnote{Our Savior Lutheran Church v. Tom Jones Enter., Inc., 421 So. 2d 738, 739 (Fla. 4th DCA 1982).} The seller must also be ready, willing and able to complete the sale in accordance with the contract terms. Ultimately, the court has discretion whether to grant specific performance, even where all other elements of the claim are proven.

If an adequate remedy at law exists, it is error for the court to grant specific performance. Whether a monetary judgment is collectible is not to be considered by the court in determining whether the movant has an adequate legal remedy.

D. Recission.

A seller seeking recission of a contract for sale must be able to return the buyer to the status quo prior to the execution of the contract for sale. To do so, the seller must return to the buyer all amounts paid to the seller or paid into escrow. However, the seller may deduct any financial damage sustained, along with any amount of financial benefit the buyer received if he or she was in possession of the real property prior to the default.

E. Reformation.

A court may equitably reform an executed agreement to effect the intent of an agreement previously entered into by the parties, but which by mistake of the draftsman, does not fulfill the parties’ mutual intent. In short, if a written instrument fails to express the mutual intent of the parties, a court in equity may reform the instrument, although the failure may have resulted from a mutual mistake as to the legal meaning and operation of the terms used in the writing. Reformation will not be permitted if only one party is mistaken as to the legal meaning, scope and effect of the agreement he or she has signed. Also, the statute of frauds is not a bar to reformation of a land contract.

III. BUYER’S REMEDIES

Where a seller wrongfully fails or refuses to perform under a contract for sale or to convey the quality of title agreed to be conveyed to the buyer, the buyer has several legal and equitable remedies against the seller. One of those remedies is for the buyer, under certain circumstances, to bring an action for specific performance of the contract for sale. If the buyer is unsuccessful in an action for specific performance, the buyer may be precluded from bringing a subsequent suit for damages based upon the doctrine of res judicata. For this reason, a buyer should bring a multiple count lawsuit for specific performance and, in the alternative, damages should the court decline to grant specific performance. Nonetheless, consideration should be given to any controlling contract provisions for liquidated damages or a limitation of liability.

A. Specific Performance.

As with a seller requesting specific performance, a buyer may only seek specific performance if the obligations for performance under the contract for sale are clear, definite and certain. The buyer must also be ready, willing and able to complete the sale. Again, the court has discretion whether to grant specific performance even where all other elements of the claim are proven. If the buyer has an adequate remedy at law, the court may not grant specific performance.

B. Notice of Lis Pendens.

If a buyer desires to pursue specific performance of a contract for sale, the buyer needs to consider recording a notice of lis pendens against the property to prevent the seller from transferring title to a subsequent buyer pending the outcome of the lawsuit. Florida’s lis pendens statute governs when that can be done, which states in part:

24 John Ringling Estates, Inc. v. White, 105 Fla. 581, 584 (Fla. 1932).
25 Greenstein v. Greenbrook, Ltd., 443 So. 2d 296, 297 (Fla. 3d DCA 1983); Alvarez v. Nestor Salesco, Inc., 695 So. 2d 941, 942 (Fla. 4th DCA 1997).
26 Rolfe, 97 So. 2d at 134.
27 Our Savior Lutheran Church, 421 So. 2d at 739.
29 Mann, 100 So. 2d at 636
30 Vagabond Travel & Tours, Inc., 440 So. 2d at 483.
When the pending pleading does not show that the action is founded on a duly recorded instrument or on a lien claimed under part I of chapter 713 or when the action no longer affects the subject property, the court shall control and discharge the recorded notice of lis pendens as the court would grant and dissolve injunctions.\(^{31}\)

In order for a notice of lis pendens to be filed and recorded by any party without first posting a bond, the lawsuit must be founded on a duly recorded instrument or upon a lien claimed under part I of Chapter 713, Florida Statutes. If the action is founded on an unrecorded document, such as a contract for sale, the proponent of the lis pendens should consider first obtaining leave of court before filing and recording the lis pendens. The court must then determine whether to require the posting of a bond to secure the opposing parties’ damages, interest thereon, and attorneys’ fees and costs that may be incurred to dissolve the lis pendens.\(^{32}\) For any lawsuit to be founded upon a duly recorded instrument, the primary rights asserted by the proponent of the lis pendens must have arisen from the recorded instrument.\(^{33}\)

The Florida Supreme Court has addressed whether it is mandatory under Florida Statute §48.23(3) for a trial court to require a lis pendens bond where the action is not based upon a recorded instrument or a construction lien.

\[\text{It is within the trial court’s discretion to determine whether to require the lis pendens proponent to post a bond when the property-holder defendant can show that damages will likely result to that defendant in the event the notice of lis pendens is unjustified.}\(^{34}\)

The Florida Supreme Court stated that the amount of the bond is also within the discretion of the trial court, but should bear a reasonable relationship to the amount of damages the seller proves are likely to result if the lis pendens is unjustified.\(^{35}\) The court again summarized its holding as follows:

In sum, we hold the trial judge has broad discretion to require the proponent of a notice of lis pendens to post a bond when the notice is not based upon a duly recorded instrument or construction lien in cases in which the property-holder defendant can show damage or injury will likely be suffered by that defendant in the event the notice was unjustified.\textsuperscript{36}

In addition, the lis pendens may be dissolved where the buyer does not establish a \textquotedblleft fair nexus between the apparent legal or equitable ownership of the property and the dispute embodied in the lawsuit."\textsuperscript{37} A fully executed contract for sale establishes a fair nexus between a buyer's claim for specific performance and ownership of the real property for purposes of defeating a seller's motion to dissolve a lis pendens. This is because any order dissolving the notice of lis pendens could jeopardize the rights of subsequent buyers or liens and could also jeopardize the buyer's unrecorded claim against the property, should the buyer prevail in his action for specific performance.\textsuperscript{38} It has been held that it would be error for a trial court to not require the posting of a bond to maintain a lis pendens for an equitable lien claim where the lawsuit is not founded upon a duly recorded instrument.\textsuperscript{39}

C. Equitable Liens.

Equitable liens arise from two sources: (a) a written contract which shows an intention to charge some particular property with a debt or obligation, and (b) when declared by a court of equity out of general considerations of right and justice. . . .\textsuperscript{40}

For example, a written contract containing an agreement for a property owner to grant a mortgage at sometime in the future as security may create a right to an equitable lien.\textsuperscript{41}

A buyer under an executory contract for sale who is not in default is entitled to rescind the contract and recover all purchase money paid with interest, along with other

Co., 637 So. 2d 5, 6, n.1 (Fla. 3d DCA 1994); Porter Homes, Inc. v. Soda, 540 So. 2d 195, 195 (Fla. 2d DCA 1989).

\textsuperscript{41} Meyer v. Schwartz, 391 So. 2d 310, 311 (Fla. 4th DCA 1980).
expenses incurred by reason of the seller's default. The buyer further has a claim to an equitable lien against the property to secure such damages. If the buyer chooses to proceed with a specific performance claim, the fact that he or she may be entitled to record a notice of lis pendens has the same effect as creating an equitable lien on the property subject to the final determination of the claim for specific performance.

D. Compensatory, Incidental and Consequential Damages.

If the seller's default was in good faith and the property has not been sold, the buyer's measure of damages is the buyer's "out-of-pocket" damages, such as any money paid to the seller, interest on that sum and any other actual damages incurred as a result of the default. If the default was in bad faith and the property has not yet been sold, the buyer is entitled to recover its "benefit of the bargain" damages, which are measured as the difference in the purchase price in the contract for sale and the fair market value of the property at the time of the breach. Bad faith is determined by the intent of the seller and is deemed present where the seller knew or should have known that the seller could not perform under the contract for sale, or where the seller simply refuses to close on the sale without legal justification.

Should a seller default under a contract by failing to close and later sells the property to another buyer, the initial buyer may pursue the seller for "benefit of the bargain" damages, measured by all monies paid to the seller, interest on that amount, special damages and any profit made by the seller on the subsequent sale. The foregoing is the rule regardless of whether the seller's default was in good faith or bad faith.

In the event a seller defaults under the contract by failing to disclose a material, known, latent defect and the buyer closes on the sale, the buyer's damages are measured by the lesser of:

1. Diminution in fair value; or

2. The cost of repairing or restoring the property to its condition prior to the defect.\textsuperscript{47}

Damages for the cost of restoration are limited to the value of the property in its original condition.\textsuperscript{48} However, the restoration rule is not applicable where: (a) the cost of restoring the property exceeds the value of the property in its original condition; (b) the restoration would result in a depreciation in the value of the property; (c) the cost of restoration is more than the actual damage sustained by the buyer; or (d) where the restoration is impracticable.\textsuperscript{49}

E. Recission.

For a buyer to rescind a contract for sale, the buyer must reconvey the real property if the sale has already closed and return all benefits received from the sale. In return, the buyer is entitled to a refund of all purchase money paid to the seller and the recission of all purchase money notes and mortgage held by the seller or others who are not good faith purchasers for value, such as holders in due course.\textsuperscript{50}

A buyer, who in good faith has made improvements to the property is entitled to receive the reasonable value of those improvements upon recission of the contract for sale.\textsuperscript{51} A trial court is not permitted to rescind a contract for sale and a deed where it is proven that recission will not return the parties to their status quo prior to the sale, particularly where one party has made improvements to the property for which no compensation is or can be received.\textsuperscript{52} This rule may not be applicable if the improvements were made by a party in possession, but after suit was instituted.\textsuperscript{53}

F. Reformation.

Reformation is proper to equitably reform an executed agreement to effect the mutual intent of an agreement previously entered into by the parties, but which by mistake of the draftsman, does not fulfill the parties' mutual intent. However, reformation will not be permitted if only one party is mistaken as to the legal meaning, scope and effect of the agreement he or she has signed.

G. Injunctions.

A temporary injunction is an extraordinary remedy. The movant must prove all essential elements for a temporary injunction with competent, admissible evidence. Those elements are as follows: (1) the likelihood of irreparable harm; (2) the unavailability of an adequate remedy at law; (3) a clear legal right to the relief requested and a substantial likelihood of success on the merits; and (4) the injunction is in the public interest.

A prospective irreparable injury must be more than a remote possibility; it must be imminent and probable. There must be a reasonable probability, not a bare possibility, that a real irreparable injury will occur. If the irreparable injury is doubtful or contingent, injunctive relief may not be granted.

Irreparable harm and the lack of an adequate remedy at law are not established where any potential loss can be adequately compensated by a monetary judgment. The irreparable injury must be of a peculiar nature, so that monetary compensation will not be adequate. Similarly, collectibility of a monetary judgment is not to be considered by the court in determining whether the movant has an adequate legal remedy.

IV. MEDIATION, ARBITRATION AND PRIVATE JUDGING

A. Arbitration.

The following is a sample clause to include in any contract for sale to provide for the arbitration of all disputes between the parties before the American Arbitration Association:

Any controversy or claim arising out of or relating to this contract for sale, or the breach thereof, shall be resolved and determined by binding arbitration administered by the American Arbitration Association under its Commercial Arbitration Rules, and judgment on the award rendered by the arbitrator(s) shall be entered in any court having jurisdiction thereof.

Arbitration through the American Arbitration Association for existing disputes may also be accomplished by use of the following agreement, independent of the contract for sale:

We, the undersigned parties, hereby agree to submit to binding arbitration administered by the American Arbitration Association under its Commercial Arbitration Rules the following controversy: (describe dispute). We further agree that we will faithfully observe this agreement and the rules, that we will abide by and perform any award rendered by the arbitrator(s), and that a judgment of any court having jurisdiction thereof shall be entered on the award.

To expedite matters, the arbitration clause can expressly adopt the summary procedures of Chapter 51, Florida Statutes, and thereby require the arbitrators and the administrator of the proceeding to comply with those procedures. In addition, the arbitration clause can provide for emergency interim relief by incorporating the American Arbitration Association’s optional rules for emergency measures of protection.

Arbitration clauses may expressly provide for the number of arbitrators, the specific minimum qualifications and experience of the arbitrators, the responsibility for payment for the costs of the arbitration, the locale for all hearings and conferences, the use of any or all discovery tools, including depositions under the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, and any other item of concern to the parties. It is also not necessary to require the arbitration to be administered by the American Arbitration Association and governed by its rules.\(^{63}\)

\(^{63}\) In the interests of complete candor, the author discloses that he is a member of the American Arbitration Association’s commercial, financial and employment arbitration and mediation panels.
B. Mediation.

If the parties to the contract for sale desire to require attendance at a mediation for any dispute arising under the contract before arbitration or litigation may be initiated, the following mediation clause may be added to the contract:

If a dispute between the parties arises out of or relates to this contract for sale, or the breach thereof, and if the dispute cannot be settled through direct negotiation, the parties agree first to try in good faith to settle the dispute by first attending mediation subject to the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure and Florida Statutes governing court ordered mediations, before resorting to arbitration, litigation, or some other dispute resolution procedure.

If the parties wish to mediate an existing dispute, they can enter into the following agreement, independent of the contract for sale:

The parties hereby submit the following dispute to mediation subject to the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure and Florida Statutes governing court ordered mediations: ____________ (describe dispute) ____________.

C. Private Judging or Voluntary Trial Resolution.

Effective October 1, 1999, Florida Statute § 44.104, entitled “Voluntary binding arbitration and voluntary trial resolution” was enacted. In summary, Florida Statute § 44.104 provides for parties to enter into a voluntary trial resolution (“VTR”) agreement to have most disputes determined by a private attorney. Pursuant to the VTR agreement, the Circuit or County Court Judge appoints a private lawyer as the Trial Resolution Judge (“TRJ”) to conduct the legal proceedings and determine the case on its merits.

To be enforceable, the VTR agreement must be in writing and signed by the parties. The legal dispute may not involve any constitutional issue, or child custody, child support or visitation issues. The VTR agreement may be signed before or after litigation is commenced and should provide for the compensation of the TRJ.

The TRJ must be a licensed member of the Florida Bar in good standing for more than five (5) years. If the VTR agreement does not specifically identify the TRJ and the parties cannot otherwise agree, the Court will appoint the TRJ as the case requires. The following is a list of benefits of VTR:

1. The parties may jointly appoint a TRJ who is a qualified, experienced specialist (Florida Bar Board Certified) in the area of the legal dispute.
2. The parties’ rights to procedural due process, rules of court and appellate rights (except for findings of fact) are preserved as with any litigation.

3. The filing of an application for VTR tolls the applicable statute of limitations.

4. The TRJ must follow the applicable law; failing which he or she may be reversed on appeal.

5. The parties have full availability to discovery and motion practice.

6. The parties have greater flexibility for hearings and trials before the TRJ.

The following is a sample contract clause for submitting permissible controversies to VTR:

Any controversy or claim arising out of or relating to this contract, or the breach thereof, shall be resolved and determined by binding voluntary trial resolution pursuant to Chapter 44, Florida Statutes, including, without limitation, the procedures set forth in Florida Statute § 44.104, and final judgment on the decision rendered by the trial resolution judge shall be entered by any court having jurisdiction thereof.

Subject to the exceptions stated in Florida Statute § 44.104, the parties to an existing dispute or pending lawsuit may also submit their controversy to VTR by use of the following agreed application to the Court:

We, the undersigned parties, hereby jointly agree and apply to the Court for binding voluntary trial resolution pursuant to Chapter 44, Florida Statutes, including, without limitation, the procedures set forth in Florida Statute § 44.104, for the following controversy: _____ (Describe the dispute or identify an existing lawsuit)______, and final judgment on the decision rendered by the trial resolution judge shall be entered by any court having jurisdiction thereof. We further agree that ________ (Insert name and address of trial resolution judge) ___________ shall be appointed by the Court as the trial resolution judge for the above-described controversy, who shall be compensated in accordance with that certain agreement between the parties and said trial resolution judge, a copy of which is attached hereto as Exhibit A.È
V. BUSINESS PRACTICES TO AVOID (AND WIN) DISPUTES

Although a seller’s or buyer’s termination of a contract for sale must comply with the pre-requisites of the contract for sale and Florida law, proving the presence of lawful grounds to terminate the contract is a separate issue of concern. At a minimum, sellers and buyers should prepare contemporaneous memoranda or telephone logs of all substantive conversations regarding the negotiation and performance of contracts for sale. Even better, confirming letters create a stronger evidentiary position in the event of a dispute.

This practice serves two functions. First, a confirming letter provides a written instrument for the parties to refer back to in the event of a good faith misunderstanding. Second, a confirming letter, log or memorandum is physical evidence of the facts at the time they occurred. This physical evidence, if made contemporaneous with the conversation and in the normal course of business, is generally admissible in court. When faced with a “he said, she said” defense, the party who also has a contemporaneous document evidencing the conversation will more often than not prevail in the dispute. Some examples of these practices are reflected in the Appendix.

VI. COLLECTION ISSUES

A. Attachment, Garnishment & Levy.

A writ of attachment creates a lien against the non-exempt real or personal property before or after a debt becomes due. A writ of attachment may be obtained when a debt is due where the debtor:

1. Will fraudulently part with the property before judgment can be obtained against him or her.
2. Is actually removing the property out of the state.
3. Is about to remove the property out of the state.
4. Resides out of the state.
5. Is actually moving himself or herself out of the state.
6. Is about to move himself or herself out of the state.
7. Is absconding.
8. Is concealing himself or herself.
9. Is secreting the property.

10. Is fraudulently disposing of the property.

11. Is actually removing himself or herself beyond the limits of the judicial circuit in which he or she resides.

12. Is about to remove himself or herself out of the limits of such judicial circuit.

Any creditor may have an attachment on a debt not due, when the debtor:

1. Is actually removing the property out of the state.

2. Is fraudulently disposing of the property to avoid the payment of his or her debts.

3. Is fraudulently secreting the property to avoid payment of his or her debts.\(^\text{64}\)

Once the writ is issued and served, the creditor must complete the lawsuit and then execute upon the property through a sheriff’s sale.\(^\text{65}\) Before any writ of attachment will issue, the creditor must post a bond equal to double the debt demanded. This bond will be security for the debtor should the court later determine the writ was improperly obtained.\(^\text{66}\)

After a monetary judgment is obtained, a writ of garnishment is available to a creditor to collect non-exempt money owed to a buyer by a third-party.

After judgment has been obtained against defendant but before the writ of garnishment is issued, the plaintiff, the plaintiff’s agent or attorney, shall file a motion (which shall not be verified or negative defendant’s exemptions) stating the amount of the judgment. The motion may be filed and the writ issued either before or after the return of execution. . . .\(^\text{67}\)

\(^{65}\) Fla. Stat. § 76.14 et seq.

\(^{66}\) Fla. Stat. § 76.12.

\(^{67}\) Fla. Stat. § 77.03.
Even before a monetary judgment is obtained, a writ of garnishment is available to a creditor to collect non-exempt money owed to the debtor by a third-party upon compliance with the following procedure:

(2) To obtain issuance of the writ, the plaintiff, or the plaintiff’s agent or attorney, shall file in the court where the action is pending a verified motion or affidavit alleging by specific facts the nature of the cause of action; the amount of the debt and that the debt for which the plaintiff sues is just, due, and unpaid; that the garnishment is not sued out to injure either the defendant or the garnishee; and that the plaintiff believes that the defendant will not have in his or her possession, after execution is issued, tangible or intangible property in this state and in the county in which the action is pending on which a levy can be made sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff’s claim. The writ of garnishment shall set forth a notice to the defendant of the right to an immediate hearing for dissolution of such writ pursuant to s. 77.07. Upon issuance of the writ of garnishment, the clerk of the court shall provide by mail a copy of the writ to the defendant.

(3) Except when the plaintiff has had an attachment writ issued, no writ of garnishment before judgment shall issue until the plaintiff, or the plaintiff’s agent or attorney, gives a bond with surety to be approved by the clerk payable to the defendant in at least double the amount of the debt demanded, conditioned to pay all costs, damages, and attorney’s fees that the defendant sustains in consequence of the plaintiff’s improperly suing out the writ of garnishment. A garnishment bond is not void or voidable because of an informality in it, nor shall the obligors be discharged because of the informality, even though the garnishment is dissolved because of the informality.

(4) The motion or pleading need not negative any exemptions of the defendant.

A continuing writ of garnishment is also available to collect a debtor’s non-exempt wages, provided the debtor is not considered the “head of household.”

Notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter, if salary or wages are to be garnished to satisfy a judgment, the court shall issue a continuing writ of garnishment to the judgment debtor’s employer which provides for the periodic payment of a portion of the salary or wages of the judgment debtor as the salary or wages become due until the judgment is satisfied or until otherwise provided by court order.

B. Fraudulent Transfers & Tracing Assets.

A corporate buyer may go out of business and default on its contract for sale with the seller. The seller may then obtain a monetary judgment against the corporate buyer only to learn that the corporation no longer has any assets to satisfy the judgment. If the corporation had substantial assets at one time, it is prudent for the seller to learn how those assets were disposed of by the buyer. Given the right facts, the individual principals of the corporate buyer, or other persons or entities, may be liable for the seller’s judgment.

Several statutory tools are available to attack a fraudulent transfer, including setting aside the transfer and levying upon the assets transferred or other substitute property of the transferee. The following are the operable fraudulent transfer statutes:

56.29. Proceedings supplementary.

(6)(a) When, within 1 year before the service of process on him or her, defendant has had title to, or paid the purchase price of, any personal property to which the defendant’s spouse, any relative, or any person on confidential terms with defendant claims title and right of possession at the time of examination, the defendant has the burden of proof to establish that such transfer or gift from him or her was not made to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors.

(b) When any gift, transfer, assignment or other conveyance of personal property has been made or contrived by defendant to delay, hinder or defraud creditors, the court shall order the gift, transfer, assignment or other conveyance to be void and direct the sheriff to take the property to satisfy the execution. This does not authorize seizure of property exempted from levy and sale under execution or property which has passed to a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice. Any person aggrieved by the levy may proceed under ss. 56.16-56.20.70

726.105. Transfers fraudulent as to present and future creditors.

(1) A transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor is fraudulent as to a creditor, whether the creditor’s claim arose before or after the transfer was made or the obligation

was incurred, if the debtor made the transfer or incurred the obligation:

(a) With actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of the debtor; or

(b) Without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation, and the debtor:

   1. Was engaged or was about to engage in a business or a transaction for which the remaining assets of the debtor were unreasonably small in relation to the business or transaction; or

   2. Intended to incur, or believed or reasonably should have believed that he or she would incur, debts beyond his or her ability to pay as they became due.

(2) In determining actual intent under paragraph (1)(a), consideration may be given, among other factors, to whether:

(a) The transfer or obligation was to an insider.

(b) The debtor retained possession or control of the property transferred after the transfer.

(c) The transfer or obligation was disclosed or concealed.

(d) Before the transfer was made or obligation was incurred, the debtor had been sued or threatened with suit.

(e) The transfer was of substantially all the debtor's assets.

(f) The debtor absconded.

(g) The debtor removed or concealed assets.

(h) The value of the consideration received by the debtor was reasonably equivalent to the value of the asset transferred or the amount of the obligation incurred.

(i) The debtor was insolvent or became insolvent shortly after the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred.
(j) The transfer occurred shortly before or shortly after a substantial debt was incurred.

(k) The debtor transferred the essential assets of the business to a lienor who transferred the assets to an insider of the debtor.\textsuperscript{71}

726.106. Transfers fraudulent as to present creditors.

(1) A transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor is fraudulent as to a creditor whose claim arose before the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred if the debtor made the transfer or incurred the obligation without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation and the debtor was insolvent at that time or the debtor became insolvent as a result of the transfer or obligation.

(2) A transfer made by a debtor is fraudulent as to a creditor whose claim arose before the transfer was made if the transfer was made to an insider for an antecedent debt, the debtor was insolvent at that time, and the insider had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent.\textsuperscript{72}

In addition to setting aside a fraudulent transfer, a corporation's shareholders may be liable for the corporation's debts to the extent that they received a distribution of the corporation's assets at a time when they knew or should have known that the corporation had outstanding debts. \textsuperscript{73}The properties of a corporation are to be deemed a trust fund for the payment of the debts of the corporation, so that the creditors have a lien upon it or right of priority out of it in preference to any shareholder of the corporation.\textsuperscript{73} A corporation is required to maintain a sufficient amount of its funds to pay the claims of its creditors, including its contingent creditors.\textsuperscript{74}

Similarly, Florida Statutes will hold the directors of a corporation personally liable for any distributions to shareholders that the directors affirmatively authorize in violation of Florida law. Chapter 607, Florida Statutes, provides that the directors of a corporation may be personally liable for distributions if the effect of which precludes the corporation's ability to pay its debts as they become due. A no distribution may be made if, after giving it effect: (a) The corporation would not be able to pay its debts as they become due in the usual course of business; or (b) The corporation's total assets would be less than the sum of its total liabilities. Any director who votes for or assents to a distribution made in violation of Florida Statutes is personally liable for the amount of the distribution that exceeds what could have been distributed in accordance with Florida law.76

C. Piercing the Corporate Veil.

One of the advantages of doing business though a corporation is that its shareholders are not liable for the corporation's debts. Nevertheless, this corporate shield or veil may be pierced under limited circumstances.

Florida courts will hold a corporation's shareholders liable for the corporation's debts where the corporation was organized or used to mislead its creditors, to perpetrate a fraud on the corporation's creditors or the corporation has been used for some illegal purpose.77 The mere ownership of a corporation by one or a handful of shareholders, however, is an insufficient reason to pierce the corporate veil.78

A critical issue in the determination of whether the corporate veil will be pierced for the imposition of personal liability is whether the corporate entity was organized or operated for an improper or fraudulent purpose.79 Unless there is a showing that a corporation was formed or employed for an unlawful or improper purpose, such as subterfuge to mislead or defraud creditors, to hide assets, to evade the requirements of a statute or some betrayal of trust, the corporate veil cannot be pierced.80

The rule of law to hold a parent corporation liable for the debts of its subsidiary is similar to the above rules. To pierce the corporate veil under Florida law, it must Re: Conference with John Doe, Broker for XYZ Corp.

This morning, I met with John Doe, broker for XYZ corp. We discussed the fact that XYZ has failed to make its deposit for the contract for sale on the Zoomer Property. In fact, he stated that his client, Jason Roe of XYZ Corp., admitted that he had no justification why the deposit was over 90 days past due. I told John that if it was not made within 10 days, I would declare a breach of the contract.

John stated that Jason assured John that the payment would be made by that date.

Re: XYZ Corp’s account number with ABC

Dear Mr. Doe:

Thank you for meeting with me this morning. As we discussed, XYZ has failed to make its deposit for the contract for sale on the Zoomer Property. I also appreciate your candid statement that your client, XYZ Corp., did not have any justification why the deposit was over 90 days past due. I told you that if the payment was not made within 10 days, I will be forced to declare a breach of the contract. In response, you advised that your client assured you that the payment would be made by that date. Please allow me to reiterate that I cannot give your client any further extensions on this past due payment.

Very truly yours,
