Focus

- Litigation
- Construction

Dedicated litigator representing contractors, developers, and design professionals in construction disputes. Skilled in motion practice, contract analysis, and translating nuanced details into clear, actionable strategy.

Cameron Helm practices civil litigation, with a focus on construction-related disputes. He regularly drafts and supports various filings, including dispositive and evidentiary motions and pleadings, and conducts in-depth research on contract liability issues, indemnity provisions, and wrongful death claims. His experience also includes analyzing large volumes of case materials to identify critical facts and streamline case strategy, and working with experts during site inspections to develop comprehensive, client-ready reports.

Cameron's support extends to appellate matters and trials, where he utilizes strong analytical and writing skills to prepare legal memoranda on complex civil and procedural issues. He participates in depositions, hearings, mediations, and oral arguments, working alongside senior litigators to advance client objectives.
