Strong foundation in appellate litigation and constitutional law. Advancing client interests with insight shaped by judicial and governmental service.

Talia focuses her practice on appellate litigation, constitutional law, and complex civil disputes. She contributes to matters involving high stakes appeals, statutory interpretation, and constitutional challenges, drawing on her background in both judicial and governmental settings.

Her career includes service as a staff attorney to Justice Jamie R. Grosshans of the Florida Supreme Court, where she assisted in reviewing appellate briefs, preparing memoranda, and drafting opinions on constitutional and statutory issues. She also worked in the Office of the General Counsel to the Governor of Florida, the U.S. House and Senate Judiciary Committees, and with trial and appellate courts in Florida, providing research and drafting support on issues in federal and civil litigation. Through these roles, she developed a strong foundation in matters spanning appellate advocacy, government investigations, and complex litigation, informing her contributions to the firm's litigation and appellate practice groups.
